Manager's Comments

In March, the offshore Renminbi (CNH) appreciated 0.4% against the USD, reaching 7.27. The movement has largely mirrored DXY index throughout the month as the dollar continued to weaken. Throughout the month, the People's Bank of China (PBoC) continued to adjust interbank liquidity with the use of reverse repurchase agreements and medium-term lending facility. In the two sessions held on 5th March, China announced a growth target of 5% and estimated fiscal deficit to be around 4% of GDP to be sourced with government debt. Chinese yields rallied after the announcement, and within a week, Chinese 10-year government bonds yields increased by 20 basis points to 1.95% before falling back to 1.82% by month end.

Information herein is based on sources we believe to be accurate and reliable as at the date it was made. We reserve the right to revise any information herein at any time without notice. No offer or solicitation to buy or sell securities and no investment advice or recommendation is made herein. In making investment decisions, investors should not rely solely on this material but should seek independent professional advice. Investing in fixed income instruments (if applicable) may expose investors to various risks, including but not limited to creditworthiness, interest rate, liquidity and restricted flexibility risks. Changes to the economic environment and market conditions may affect these risks, resulting in an adverse effect to the value of the investment. During periods of rising nominal interest rates, the values of fixed income instruments (including short positions with respect to fixed income instruments) are generally expected to decline. Conversely, during periods of declining interest rates, the values are generally expected to rise. Liquidity risk may possibly delay or prevent account withdrawals or redemption. Investment involves risks, in particular, risks associated with investment in emerging and less developed markets. Past performance is not indicative of future performance.
